Personal Reflection:

Role of ultrasound and colored Doppler examination in the diagnosis and the classification of the superficial soft tissue vascular anomalies. This research is really educational and informative. It shows the importance of B-mode images and lesion characterization, using the proper technique from utilizing the color flow to determine it is vascular or avascular and if it is solid or cystic. It also explains the relevance of using the pulse Doppler for arterial or venous flow classification. I will definitely make sure that the new learnings and information I have gained will be applied in my job.

Transcatheter Arterialization of Deep Veins in Chronic Limb-Threatening Ischemia. This article gives us a wider knowledge about the treatment, its safety and effectiveness.
